SANTANELLI WAKENS HIS SOUND RYPNOTIC SLUMBERER

lumber last Wednesday evening at 10:10. At 5 minutes past 10 last night Santanelli called out to his subject that he was going to wake him up in a few minutes, and the latter stirred uneasily on his cot. Then, just before quarter past 10, the sleeper was induced to go apon the stage and sit in a chair, while still under control.

From this he was thrown into catalepsy, placed across two wooden horses, one beneath his shoulders and the other supporting his shins, and then the hypnotist stood his whole weight upon the stomach that for a week had nourishment. Once more in the chair, the "control" was about to waken him, when the medical student that had had charge of the watch during the week objected that there were two minutes to elapse before the week would be finished. So the rousing was week would be finished. So the rousing was delayed while the man was weighed. He made the indicator of the automatic weighing machine turn to 187½ pounds.

A week before it had gone around to 175, ahowing that he had lost 17½ pounds while nappling. Next the bed on which he had lain all the while was pulled apart piece by piece to show that there was no hidden source of nutriment in it, and then the serious preparations for awakening began.

show that there was no hidden source of nutriment in it, and then the serious preparations for awakening began.

The sleeper was seated in a chair, and six of Santanelli's assistants held him down. Two men selzed each a leg and held it to the chair rungs; the sleeper's arms fell to two other men and were elmilarly pinioned, and two more men clasped the subject around the neck and chest. With a clap or two of the hands and several loud shouts from the hypnotist the sleeper's face began to work as if he were striving to open his eyes. Then his body suddenly stiffened and bent till he was bowed backward. This spasm was so severe the six fellows who were acting in the capacity of binding were lifted this way and that, and it looked for a moment as if the group would be thrown to the floor. But at the end of a minute a look of consciousness came into the subject's eyes, he gave a smile of fellowship to the men that were holding him, and his convulsion relaxed. Then he walked down one aisle of the theatre and up the other, seeming to be physically strong, though pale, and apparently mentally befogged. On his return to the stage the other men that assist Santanelli as subjects greeted the newly roused man heartily, as if he were a friend returned from a long journey.

Six physicians were on the stage to watch the rousing, and the leader of the watchers endorsed the statement that the subject had been under close watch all the week, and had had no nourishment administered in that time.

Five men that present a very unusual appearance are the Royal English Handbell Ringers, who are announced in big letters in the bill at Keith's Union Square. They are fresh from the lyceum bureaus and are an untheatric lot. Their costumes include trunks half way to the knees, hose to the big buckled shoes, elaborate doublets in gay colors, and around each neck is a big white ruff of the sort that school histories credit to Walter Raleigh and to John Smith of Pocahontas memory. Two of the men wear full beards, one has a bald spot, and only one is smoothly shaven. The chap that takes charge of the bass bells would pass for the original of many pictures of President Cleveland, and his dignified manner is strongly contrasted with the capering of the troupe's leader. The latter's bells carry the air, and keep him busy in their management, but he finds time to jump up and down in an untrained dance. It hasn't the regularity of movement that characterizes the steps of "Mud and McCarthy, the celebrated Hibernian song and dance team," and the bellinger plainly dances because he enjoys it, while the other sort of dancers quite as plainty step out because they are paid for it. So the audience laughs at the uncouth caperer, rather than at his capers. The bells these musicians handle do not give out the piercing, ear-splitting tones that come from the ordinary racks of sieigh bells, and instead of "She May Have Seen Better Days" and "Just Tell Them that You Saw Me," which are inevitable from a "world-famed musical artiste," there are classic selections in which four parts are sustained. The gods like the music, but can't understand why bells that are a foothigh shouldn't have more clang to 'em. Two of the men wear full beards, one has a incorporated in the musical sketch that Charles T. Ellis and Clara Moore are doing at Proctor's Pleasure Palace is a song whose pathos is of just the sort in which the gods delight. Mr. Ellis has been a star on the popular-priced circuits, and knows from experience that a telling medium for his musical yodle is one that describes a pa without a chick, a brood without a pa, or that in some way relates heartrending family matters. So in coming to continuous vaudeville he selects a ditty of Christmas time. In its refrain are the words of a call, stating as an inducement that she has of brothers and sisters only three. At this stage of the refrain the front of the house that is painted on the back drop is Illuminated so that its interior is shown, the child appearing among her household goods to accentuate the climax. All outside is snow. Again the interior is lighted up, the little girl being found this time in an attitude of despair, but with the third singing of the refrain the house is dark. It is plainly a case of no coal and kindlings, for the waif appears in frent of the house and lies down in the street, in which the snow is failing fast. As the singer nears the end of his lines, a big policeman enters, spics the child, lifts her in his arms, and carries her away. Then the up-stairs critics give, hand, foot, and voice to their approval, and the duet that follows this song is well under way before the applause is hushed. This is particularly magnanimous of the gods, since one of Mr. Ellie's pretty yedle songs that precedes the snow-bound one ends with his throwing nosepays into the audience. Rosebuds and violets are such poor missiles that no blossoms reach up-stairs admirers, but they seem to regard that wintry rescue as of greater worth than whole conservatories of bloom.

The irrepressible "danse du ventre," which under various names survives with the persistence of a deeply rooted institution, is again seen in its native form in the Bowery. The police opposition to this style of entertainent did not rid the city of it, and not many variety shows in the Bowery are free from these dances. Sometimes they are "coutcheecoutchee," at others they are "houla-houla," but they are always the same, depending for their effect on the action of the stomach mus-The present interpreters of this Oriental habit are encamped now in an unrented store. The walls are hung with draperies painted in Egyptian figures, and from a quarter of an hour preceding every one of the frequent performances the company is shown in front of the entrance, while a veciferous "barker" calls attention to the entertainment. The dancers are undoubtedly native Algerians. There are three women, and they include, as a matter of course, the inevitable Sultans and Fatima without which no troupe would tempt fortune. One of the women is stout and old, and her performance receives always the qualified commendation which expresses itself in such words as "Very good for an old lady," or "Not bad for her age." She is quite the most decorate with one of the troupes of women that dance only from the waist up. She rises slowly when her turn comes, walks into the middle of the platform at one end of the stage, and slowly turns from side to side, holding her hands in the air and clapping them together from time to time. This is accompanied by an unchanging expression of stolid innifference, which varies only at the conclusion of her dance. Then she does look slightly relieved as she drops into her seat. The ofher two women are younger. All of them affe swaddled in draperes and hung over with cheap brass charms of coins and beads. They indicate very little of the character of the dance, and maybe this comes from a realization of the fact that Police Headquarters is only a block and a half away. Under any effectionationes, there would not be much that was objectionably suggestive in a dance of this kind done by a woman fully dressed, and the costinues of the lancer responding to the property name of "Fatima" painted in Egyptian figures, and from a quarter of an hour preceding every one of the fredressed, and the cestumes of the howery wrighters protect their audiences from any undue revelations. Occasionally the dancer responding to the property name of "Fatima" seems to be overcome by a sense of the reality of the dance itself, and a few convuisive contractions indicate that the real spirit of the diversion is something with which she is familiar. But these features of her performance come rarely, and evidently only in those moments in which her mind is far away from the fittle audience gathered in the aturity hall and the sound of the elevated railroad rushing along outside the windows. The women who to this dance in Paris, as well as these who tried two years ago to do it here, wore only a thin silk shirt, fitting like skin over their stomachs, and the full Turkish silk trousers. The latter reformed dance which is prespering on the Bowery has its participants covered with skirts and gauge silk waists.

Mrs. Lilyon Daniels of 173 West Forty-seventh street and James Mortimer Chuns, who has lived at the Barrett House for some time, were married at 7:30 o'clock last evening in St. Leo's Church, the Rev. Father Ducey officiating. The bride was attended by Miss Elizabeth Heiène Freston, while William Hamilton Hendoes what his manager calls a "torture dance." He is a lanky, emaclated man, wearing only a long white gown, which is short enough to exhibit his thin, long legs. His arms, too, are bare, and into his forearm, so thin that the skin seems to be covering only the bones, he sticks live long needles, pushing them into the flesh with great deliberation, but with force enough to keep them standing upright for five minutes, while the points are seen pretruding from the other side of his arm. A red-hot iron plate is brught on, and, to the internse amusement of his associates who are seated about the stage, he dances on the iron for the amusement of the spectators. The whole exhibition is intensely painful, and perhaps its most objectionable feature is the needle which he sticks into the skin of his face within a half inch of the left eye. This performance is repeated a dozen times every day, and, in view of that, there seems no occasion for wonder at the man's distressing physical appearance. There is nothing more characteristic of all these Griental performers than their complete indifference to the audience that happens to be witnessing them. They rarely ever exhibit interest enough to speak with one another, but lounge about, waiting for the time when they will be called out by the manager and made to do their share. That rarely awakens any interest in them. The torture man looked rather bored while he was sticking plus into himself, and his animation over the hot iron looked as though it might be assumed. The only person who gave any spirit to the entertainment were two "brothers." who really looked as though they might be. The Sun some weeks ago told how the scheme was to be worked. Land was to be acquired and the fountain erected thereon, and some day possibly the city might formally accept it and even givelt a better location. Several sites were offered, but none of them pleased the site Committee, and it was not until there was a certainty that the Greater New York bill would be passed over the vetoes of the Mayors of New York and Brooklyn that the problem was solved.

The site selected is at North Beach, on Long Island Sound, just north of Astoria. When consolidation comes, North Beach, as a part of the town of Astoria, will be included in the great city, and as Mr. Steinway and Mr. Ehret own most of the land up that way they decided that the picnic ground would be a good place in which to place the fountain. Thereupon they made an offer to the Heine Memorial Committee to give for love and one doilar a plot of ground, 100x100, in which to place the fountain, and which the committee would hold in trust for the Heine Memorial Association forever.

The offer is well thought of by the committee, which it is said is ready to accept anything that will rid it of the incubus placed upon them. Consequently a meeting of the association will be called soon and action taken on the proposition. To make the offer more attractive Messrs, Steinway and Ehret nave said that they will change the name of the resort from North Beach to Heine Park. The Rev. SIR JOHN MILLAIS DOOMED. The President of the Royal Academy Su

The disease which has for some time past affected Sir John Millais, the President of the Royal Academy, has been pronounced by his physicians to be cancer of the throat, and they say that his condition is hopeless. The an-nual dinner of the Royal Academy was this year abandoned, and after his election Sir John Millais was unable to make a speech. It was only the other day, however, that the real nature of the disease became known, and it is said that he may live only for a short time, or, on the other hand, last for a year. The patient is aware of his own condition. On Feb. 20 Sir John Millais was unanimously elected to fill the Presidency of the Royal Academy, which had been left vacant by the death of Lord Leighton. He was born in 1829 at Southampton, and for many years his family had held a place among the lesser landlords in the island of Jersey. He began to study art when he was nine years old in Mr. Sass's acad when he was nine years on in air. Sass a coad-emy, and when he was eleven became a pupil of the Royal Academy, where he won a first prize in drawing. He exhibited first at the Academy in 1846 with his "Pizarro Seizing the Inca of Pern." and this was followed by "Dunstan's Emissaries Seizing Queen Eigiva," and a large cartoon exhibited at the Westminster competi-tion.

Emissaries Seizing Queen Eigen, and siarge cartoon exhibited at the Westminster competition.

While still a student Millais had rebelled against many of the conventional formulas of the academic methods, and, influenced by the spirit of early Italian art, he, with Dante Gabriel Rossettland William Holman Huut, founded the "Pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood," which later included a number of other well-known painters and had a powerful effect on English art of the century. Afterward Millais clung less tenaciously to the principles of this school than other members of the guild, who issued in 1830 a periodical called the Germ; or, Art and Puetry, which had only a short existence. John Ruskin was one effective advocate of the new movement, and in 1851 began to support it liberally in his lectures aed writings. Millais's "Our Saviour," "Ferdinand Lured by Ariel," "Mariana in the Moated Grange," "The Woodman's Daughter," "The Huguenots," and "Ophelia" were the pictures which showed most strongly the influence of this period in his career. In 1853 he was elected an associate of the Royal Academy, and ten years later was made a member.

this period in his career. In 1803 he was elected an associate of the Boyal Academy, and ten years later was made a member.

Sir John Millais has of late years devoted himself largely to portrait painting. One of his most recent pictures was a portrait of Lord Rosebery's daughter. In 1894 he exhibited a portrait of "The Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone and His Grandson," and in 1803 he showed a portrait of John Hare. In 1878 he was decorated with the ribbon of the Legion of Honor, and in 1881 was appointed a trustee of the National Portrait Gallery. A year later he was elected a foreign associate of the Beaux Arts. In 1885, on the recommendation of Mr. Gladstone, he was made a baronet. He married the divorced wife of John Ruskin.

The families of Solomon Littenberg and Jacob Oppenheimer are celebrating a double engagement of marriage between their younger members, and a large number of the Jewish people of the east side and of Manhattanville are celebrating with them. Solomon Littenberg is one of the well-known men in that part of this city which lies east of the Bowery in the neighborhood of Grand street. This naturally led to a more intimate relationship between the two families, and a few months later young Jacob Oppenheimer, who is only a few months older than Max Littenberg, discovered that Max's sister Flora had a particular charm for him. It didn't take long after that for all four of the young people, and perhaps for the eider ones also, to find out that there were likely to be a couple of marriages. Then arose a rivalry as to which young man should pop the question first, and which engagement should be first announced.

question first, and which engagement should first announced.

There is no record as to whether Max or Jacob was the first to ask the momentous question, but as soon as each knew that the other had been accepted, Jacob insisted upon it as a right that, as, he was the cider. Max and his sister should not announce their engagement first. So it was arranged that both engagements should be announced at the same ment hist. So it was arranged that ooth engagements should be announced at the same time, and the engagement cards contained the names of all four of the contracting parties.

The public announcement was made on Tuesday night at the assembly rooms of the Litenbergs in Essex street, and they were filled with invited guests. The celebration was still in progress yesterday. The weddings are to be in December.

MISS CLEMMONS ON THE ST. PAUL. So Is Howard Gould, but He Dentes Having Married the Actress.

There probably will be no lack of music on the American line steamship St. Paul, which sailed yesterday for Southampton. Some of the makers of melody who were among her multitude of passengers were Calvé, the De Reszkes, Mile. Bauermeister, Signor Cremonini, Mile. Olitzka, Miss Sophie Traubmann, M. Lubert, Louis Saar, and Anna and Georgia Deets

Howard Gould, who was also one of the St. Paul's passengers, said that he had not been married to the actress. Katherine Clemmons, Although her name did not appear on the passenger list, Miss Clemmons had a stateroom on the St. Paul. It is said that she went aboard the ship on Tuesday night to avoid observation. Mr. Gould said that he was going to Europe on private business, and didn't know when he would be back.

As Miss Olga Nethersole was going on board she was sarved with the summons and complaint in an action to recover $10,000 damages brought against her by Estelle Johnston, who claims that Miss Nethersole has been playing a version of "Carmen" which is an infringement on a drama of the same name written by Miss Johnston from Prosper Mérimée's novel.

Deputy Sheriff Whoriskey had an attachment against Joseph G. Pangborn of Baltimore for $1,719 in favor of Oscar F. Bresee, Mr. Pangborn sailed on the St. Paul yesterday with goods to exhibit in Russia. The Sheriff served the attachment on Mr. Pangborn on the steamer, which, in the mean time, had left her dock, find the deputy came very near having to make a trip to Europe, but was taken off the steamer by a tug down the bay. by a tug down the bay.

HOLLAND HOUSE GUESTS ROBBED. A Hall Boy Caught Steuling Marked Money

Patrick Daly, 22 years old, a bell boy employed in the Holland House, was held for trial Jefferson Market Court yesterday on a charge of iarcenty preferred by Frank Harrison, super-intendent of the hotel. For the past two months boarders who checked their overcoats in the coat room have frequently complained to the management that money had been removed from their coats while they were in the hotel's keeping. Several of the employees were watched, and Daly was the one who was finally suspected. Suspected.
On Tuesday afternoon a marked bill was put in an overcoat and the coat checked. Daly was in the coat room when the coat was checked. Haif an hour later he was called into the office and searched. The marked bill was found in one of his pockets. He waived examination.

The Business Directory for 1896.

Trow's Business Directory" for 1896 is out, and gives the addresses of business houses as they will be after to-morrow. The volume is the forty-ninth in the series, the directory hav-ing been formerly Wilson's. In the main part ing been formerly Wilson's. In the main part there are 1,045 pages, and besides this there is a street directory and a complete Index. The volume contains also a large map of the city, the territory recently annexed in Westchester county being included. Farts of Brooklyn and derivey City also appear on the margins, as do ferry lines. The location of piers and public parks, street railroad routes, tables of distances, the regulations for cab charges, and the locations of police and engine houses, are also given the various cities of the country, which may be seen at the library of the Trow Company. seen at the library of the Trow Company.

Their Brothers in the Same Business May Se Welcomed to It-He Beplores the Prejudice Against Their Sex. Dr. Chauncey M. Depew, in a talk yesterday at Madison Square Garden to the graduates of the woman's law class of the New York Uni-

reretty, anid:

"There is much and just criticism of hardhearted employers who live and thrive by cupning the life blood of their employees, but in many cases the employers cannot help themselves. Ninety per cent, of the value of every article of commerce is labor. Cheap labor-too cheap to give the opportunity for right living and right thinking-is one of the dangers of the future. It threatens us from Japan, from China. and from India, because of the quick intercommunication by steam and electricity. The manufacturer who can sell his shirts at $12 a dozen may be met by a competitor who can sel shirts of the same material and of as good make for $10. He does it because he gets cheaper

"If a brother and sister, equally equipped, go out into the world for employment, there are ten places open for the brother where there is one for the sister. The result is that, while the brother can find employment at remunerative wages, the sister is overwhelmed by the surplus of energy applying for the things which she is permitted to do.

"It is a mistake to suppose that the prejudice against higher education has died out or that the feeling against a woman entering the professions or studying them no longer exists. The young lawyer or ductor or specialist or engineer is welcomed everywhere. Fathers look kindly upon him as a promising husband for their daughters, and mothers receive him with flattering attention. His sister finds the doors of society, in a large measure, closed against her. Society admits her brilliancy, her proficiency, her right to earn a living, but is afraid to recognize her. The man who does not do some work in the United States in business or in the professions is looked upon with contempt. The woman who does earn a living has a constant struggle to avoid being regarded in the same way because she labors.

"The brother and sister are educated for business. The brother enters a great banking or brokerage firm in Wall street, and his sister procures a position with the same firm. Because of this connection and its possibilities the brother is a welcome guest at every gathering of fashion, refinement, and exclusiveness, while the sister finds few invitations awaiting her. It is for you, young ladies, to preach and work against this prejudice which is doing so much harm to your sisters."

JUDGE PRYOR SCORES A DOMINIE. Suys He Alded and Abetted the Crime of Bigamy.

Justice Pryor had a large calendar of undefended divorce cases before him yesterday. Charles W. Schneider sought an absolute divorce from his wife. Josephine, to whom he was married in 1891. They separated after two years, and Mrs. Schneider married Charles Ziegler, in February, 1894. Ernest Ziegler was a reluctant witness in behalf of Schneider. He said that his brother Charles had married Mrs. Schneider. "What," exclaimed Justice Pryor, "you do not mean that they went through a ceremonia marriage?"

"I do," Ziegler answered. "I will stop this bigamy in some way," said the Justice. "I am going to send this case to the District Attorney to investigate."

That the second marriage had occurred was inclusively shown by the Rev. Henry Hoebel of 207 East Eighty-third street. The clergyman add that he did not know the parties nor their witnesses. He had put the usual questions to the woman. She said that her name was Josie Wohlen, that her maiden name was Brandt, and that she was a widow. The clergyman said: "I took her statements to be true."

that she was a widow. The clergyman said: "I took her statements to be true."

"You should not, as a clergyman, have done so," said the Justice. "You have aided and abetted bigamy. You ought to be more careful in performing marriage ceremonies, and exercise a little prudence and common sense. You should not have consummated this crime. This is at least the sixth case that has been brought to my attention in two months where bigamy is at least the sixth case that has been brought to my attention in two months where bigamy has been committed deliberately. It is out-rageous that ministers of the Gospel should not examine the witnesses and principals to mar-riages before performing ceremonies."

The Justice said he would grant the decree of

ONE WAS SURELY GUILTY.

Pickpocket McCarthy Exonerates the Man Arrested with Him.

Two men were arrested in Brooklyn on Monday for stealing Stewart J. Donnelly's watch while he stood on Court street watching the parade of Barnum's circus. The watch was found in the possession of Charles McCarthy the prisoners, but the other prisoner, William Doran of 137 East Twenty-fifth street, William Doran of 137 East Twenty-fifth street, this city, protested that he had taken no part in the robbery and had never seen McCarthy before. The case was up for hearing yesterday before Justice Walsn, and McCarthy said he desired to make a statement.

"Your Honor," he said, "I want to make a clean breast of this because I don't want to see an innocent man suffer. I took the watch, and Doran is innocent. I never saw him in my life until he was arrested."

Doran said he was employed in the power house on Lexington avenue, this city, and that he had been recommended to the place by Alexander E. Orr, President of the Chamber of Commerces.

Justice Walsh held McCarthy for the Grand Jury and deferred decision in Doran's case until his statements can be investigated.

CANNOT VISIT HER CHILDREN. Mrs. Monjo Lost All Her Right to Then Through Her Divorce.

The old Monjo divorce case was before Justice Clement in the Supreme Court in Brooklyn yesterday on a motion made by Mrs. Kate Monjo-Solomon that the judgment of absolute divorce against her be so modified as to per-divorce against her be so modified as to permit her to visit her children at reasonable times and places. Mrs. Monjo-Solomon has two boys and a girl, and she has seen the girl but once in seven years.

Justice Clement, in denying the application, said that, as the judgment of divorce was taken by default, she had lost her right to prove her innocence or to liticate the case. Her sons were old enough to decide for themselves whether they would visit or see their mother. The daughter had stated that she did not desire to see her, and Justice Clement said that it was his duty to deny the motion. his duty to deny the motion.

John Fuchs Convicted of Forgery. John Fuchs of Third street, this city, who served a term in Sing Sing for passing a forged heck on Casperfeld & Co. of this city, was tried in Jersey City yesterday for passing a forged in Jersey City yesterday for passing a forged check on Harry Babchin, a jeweller at 22% Newark avenue. Fuchs bought a diamond pin and watch for $85. He tendered in payment a check for $125 purporting to be drawn by Gustave Hierleman, a lawyer in this city, on the First National Bank of Brooklyn.

Babchin was "By." He took the check, gave Fuchs a receipt for it, and told him to call for the goods and the change on the following Friday, adding that in the mean time he would find out if the check was good or not. Fuchs never went back for the goods or the change. He was vent back for the goods or the change. He

The fire was extinguished after doing slight damage.

Fined for Selling Rice Wine.

Chung Au of 33 Mott street, a Chinese groceryman, was fined $50 yesterday by Judge Cowing in the General Sessions for selling "sacki," or Chinese rice wine, in violation of the Excise law. Ching's counsel claimed that "sacki," did not come under the provisions of the Raines law, but the Health Scard's analysis showed that it contained 52 per cent, of alcehol. CANADA'S NEW MINISTRY.

Nir Charles Tapper's Cabinet Is Not All the Conservatives Hoped For.

TORONTO, April 20.-Sir Charles Tupper's efforts to secure new material for his Ministry to go to the country have not been as successful as the Conservative party hoped. Chief Justice Meredith has, it is believed, refused to leave the bench to re-enter politics. He is undoubtedly the strongest man Sir Charles Tupper could get for Ontario, where the cause of the present Ministry has been weakened on account of their determination to force, if possible, the system of State-ordered separate schools on Manitobathis being objectionable to their followers in Ontario.

It is reported also that Mr. J. A. Chaplean, Lieutenant Governor of Quebec, whom Str Charles Tupper had hoped to get into his new Cabinet to manage the campaign in Quebec, vill not serve.

SMITH, TOO, DISCLAIMS GOFF.

Nobody Seems Willing to Accept Responsibility for the Recorder's Nomina The question "Who is responsible for Goff?" remains unanswered yet. It has been understood that Charles Stewart Smith, who got the Chamber of Commerce to guarantee the payment of Goff's fee as counsel to the Lexow Committee, and who was Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Committee of Seventy, which nominated Goff, was mostly to blame. A Sun reporter saw Mr. Smith last evening at his

SUN reporter saw Mr. Smith last evening at his home and asked him for the facts about Goff's nomination for the office of Recorder. Mr. Smith wrote the following statement:

"The Executive Committee of the Committee of Seventy, after repeated conferences with the leaders and representatives of the Republican party, the County Democracy, the German Reform Association, and the Good Government clubs, agreed unanimously upon the citizens' ticket, which had at its head W. L. Strong for Mayor and John W. Goff for Recorder. The ticket was unanimously accepted by the Committee of Seventy. It was then offered by the Committee of Seventy to all the organizations above referred to, who were opposed to Tammany Hall, and was accepted by them all as their own nominations. This is the whole story in brief.

"Dr. Parkhurst was not a member of the Committee of Seventy. He had no part in the formation of their ticket, although, as you may very well know, when the ticket was put into the field he gave it his most earnest and effective support, and contributed more to its success in the election than any other man."

TURK AND ELLINGSWORTH PLEAD Accused of Forging a Beed by Mrs. Borkell WHITE PLAINS, April 29 .- John Ellingsworth

the New York ex-deputy sheriff who lost his place for taking Police Inspector McLaughlin to a Turkish bath instead of the Tombs, as directed by the court, during the Inspector's trial, and Lawyer R. L. Turk of the firm of Turk & Roth, with offices in the World building, were arraigned before Judge Dykman here this afternoon to answer to indictments for forgery in the second degree found against them by the Westchester county Grand Jury in Feb by the Westchester county Grand Jury in February. Ellingsworth gave himself up, and Turk was arrested this afternoon. Both pleaded not guilty, and were released on $2,000 ball each.

The charge of forgery is preferred by Mrs. Anna Borkell of Brooklyn, who says that when she went into business recently with Ellingsworth as a partner she deeded to her daughter some property she owned in the city of Yonkers. Her daughter, Mrs. Eliza Messerschmid, in turn made and executed a deed in blank, so that in the event of her death the name might be filled in as circumstances might require and the deed could be recorded. This blank deed was given to Lawyer Turk, who, it is asserted, inserted Ellingsworth's name in the blank space, recorded the deed, and then Ellingsworth mortgaged the property for $500.
